Frequently Asked Questions About Personal Injury Cases in California

How long do I have to file a personal injury lawsuit in Los Angeles?

In California, the statute of limitations for most personal injury cases is two years from the date of the injury. However, there are important exceptions for claims against government entities, which require a claim to be filed within six months. Consulting an attorney immediately is crucial to protect your rights.

What if I was partially at fault for the accident in Los Angeles?

California follows a pure comparative negligence rule. This means you can still recover compensation even if you are 99% at fault, though your settlement will be reduced by your percentage of fault. An experienced personal injury attorney can fight to minimize your assigned fault percentage.

How do personal injury attorneys in Los Angeles get paid?

Most personal injury attorneys, including our firm, work on a contingency fee basis. This means you pay no upfront fees. Our fee is a percentage of the compensation we recover for you, ensuring our interests are fully aligned with yours.

What is the role of medical evidence in a personal injury case?

Medical evidence is the cornerstone of any personal injury claim. It definitively links the accident to your injuries, documents their severity, and establishes the need for future care. A study titled “The Economic Burden of Injury” in the American Journal of Public Health underscores the importance of thorough medical documentation in quantifying losses. Our lawyers work to obtain and present this evidence compellingly.
